

ABSTRACT

A message recorder permits non-sequential review of new or archived incoming messages. A filename generator generates a filename based on call identification information of an incoming telephone call. A storage interface allocates a region of a data storage to the incoming call and stores message data of the incoming call to the allocated region. Stored message data may be accessed via a corresponding filename rather than sequentially as in a conventional answering machine.